North Korea Bomb Threats On The United States

As United States tries to keep armistice with North Korea, North Korea wiped it clean from their preparation to bomb the United States with their nukes, or heavy type missiles. The threat is increasing each day while United States continues to gain peace, but the peace is not in sight. North Korea and South Korea is still fighting each other, but South Korea is backing off from North Korea to let the North do their preparations. Though while South Korea as backed off, it will strike back if provoked in war. United States sends F-15s to South Korea in case if needed to fight back with artillery force.

(Information from: GMA and FOX News)

F-22's Sent To South Korea Because of Rising Tensions

The United States Air Force has sent F-22 Raptors to the main U.S. base in Korean Osan Air Base has many jets, because they are getting prepared for a break in tension between the North and South Korea. Tensions has risen because the Communist North Korea planned an attack on an American base in South Korea. They discontinued the planning when the Air Force flew a B-2 bomber fleet, with intentions of "flexing", their military muscle toward North Korea.

The U.S. warns that Korea is no pushover, and the planning of attack should be taken seriously and not brushed off. North Korea even claimed to be in a state of war with their southern neighbor, even though they have been at war since the 1950-53 conflict. The thirty year old leader of North Korea may have no limits to prove his toughness to the most elite countries. This could be the brink of war for the United States.
