

KIDS' MAGAZINE FOR READERS AND WRITERS

Children magazines and their online counterparts are very important for helping students establish lifelong reading habits. Few can ignore the pull of new weekly or monthly edition of a favorite source of up-to-date information on a hobby sport, or other interest. Magazines are great sources of high-interest material for reluctant and/or developing readers.

Some kids' magazines are not only written for children, but by children. These publications are the primary market for children's original writing. Contact them for guidelines for submitting stories, poems, and art. Young writers, whose work is accepted, generally receive copies of the volume instead of monetary rewards. The review and notification time for submissions may take many months, but if published, the wait is well worth it to budding authors.
