TECHNOLOGY CORNER

keep online safety at the top of your concerns. Your devices and any programmes that communicate with the internet should be up to date in order to reduce the risk of attacks. Think before clicking. Phishing scams are extremely common and many are linked to COVID 19. Emails or SMS messages promising new information on the virus can contain malware in links and attachments. Also, look out for anomalies in the way the message is written. Protect your privacy at all times. Spending as much time online as we do can expose more of your personal information This is a great time to review your privacy settings. I realize this is a hassle at times but please take the time to them properly even if it's an inconvenience. Connect on video chats safely. Video conferencing has exploded during the pandemic as our colleagues, families and students turn to apps which allow large-scale groups calls. Zoom was forced to retract a claim that it was end to end encrypted and we all know that was not true. As some of you may or may not do with your home spring cleaning, do a digital spring clean of old accounts you no longer use which could potentially expose some of your data. Keep a small footprint in the digital world. The less of you out there the better. Finally if you haven't noticed there is also a INFODEMIC around the world due to Covid 19. In a nutshell, there is a vast amount of misinformation out in the web. Check your sources and if in doubt ask
