Child Sexual Abuse

"It is better that scandals arise than the truth be suppressed." —Pope St. Gregory the Great

By Crispin Ketelhut Montelione (Associate Director of VIRTUS®)

Shock. Anger. Disgust. Outrage. Contempt. Frustration. Betrayal. Shame. Fear. Pain. Sorrow. Numbness. If you're like me, you're feeling one, several, or all of these emotions after learning about recent bishop allegations, Grand Jury reports, and ongoing scandals involving the Catholic Church. These reactions are the appropriate emotions to injustice. What we have learned about clergy abuse over the years is unjust and wrong. One victim of child sexual abuse is far too many. One victim of child sexual abuse on behalf of someone representing God or the Church is even more egregious. Victims who continued to be abused because of severely poor leadership is deplorable.

This is clearly complex and can feel as if there isn't hope. Many people have been adamant in saying that the fault of abuse falls squarely upon the shoulders of the abusers and that we, as the laity, are not part of the problem. Of course, the fault of abuse absolutely lies with the abuser AND with those who directly or indirectly allowed the abuse. Additionally, there are people who don't do the right thing when faced with suspicions of abuse. People in leadership clearly have the main responsibility for the welfare of the lambs in their flocks. Church leadership must be held accountable, as do the Bishops and Church leaders. But, in a smaller, more particular way, it's also my unique responsibility to contribute to the safety of children—and it's yours, too. We are all required morally to protect the vulnerable around us. Please recognize that this article is NOT saying that we, as the laity, must carry the entire responsibility of protecting children. Of course not! Rather, we have a unique ability to provide care and a safe haven. As the laity, we have tremendous power! I am greatly encouraged by the immense effort on behalf of caring adults who work diligently to "do the right thing." Protocols for safe environments in the Church in the United States exist and are protecting the vulnerable. This being said, there is always room for improvement.

So now what? How can we use the energy of our emotions and reactions to drive us to do something constructive when so many of us are reeling? St. Augustine of Hippo said, "Hope has two beautiful daughters; their names are Anger and Courage. Anger at the way things are, and courage to see that they do not remain as they are." It takes courage for all of us to become protectors of children. You are already a part of this effort, but there are some people in your cohort who probably need additional help with this. There's no one-size-fits-all solution to address the issue of child sexual abuse, but there are a variety of actions that each of us can do to help, such as:

- Invite a friend. If you have friends who are struggling with knowing what to do about the issue, share the facts and tangible action items that you learned in your VIRTUS® class.
- Inventory your behavior, and ensure that you know what the procedures are for your program. Your behavior should be above reproach for two reasons: So that potential abusers can't blend in, and so that children aren't conditioned to inappropriate behavior.
- Express compassion for victims. They have likely experienced people attempting to discredit their experience and who have ostracized them during an extremely vulnerable time. Sharing about sexual abuse takes a tremendous amount of courage. Even if the abuse happened long ago, it can have long-lasting effects on survivors.
- Be a trusted adult. Let children know that you will protect them and they won't get into trouble with you. If you have the privilege of being a child's trusted adult and they disclosed abuse to you, do the right thing! If you see something contrary to the code of conduct or that makes you feel uncomfortable, speak up! More importantly, if you suspect or know of any type of abuse, you must call Child Protective Services. If your suspicion involves a member of the clergy or an employee/volunteer in church or school, the next communication is to your Archdiocese so that they can remove the person from public ministry if necessary while the investigation is conducted.

I know this topic is hard to discuss and challenging to hear. However, we believe that when our VIRTUS® training is done well and the action items are implemented by caring adults such as you, it makes a tremendous difference for the protection of children. These types of scenarios are going to continue to come to light. And, as painful as they are for us and especially for survivors, the revelation of abuse is a good thing. It means we get to root out the issues and cull the wheat from the chaff, allowing us to modify and solidify our procedures, policies, screening practices, and monitor general checks and balances so that we can aid in the delivery of the Gospel of the Immaculate Church that Christ put on this earth. Take courage and stay the course! There is hope! You are forming this moment in Church history and will be remembered for your empathy for victims and your commitment to keep youth safe while on your "watch."
